

What should our economy look like in 2030?

Evening Seminar – Tuesday 13th August 2019 – 6pm-8pm

Makerspace Adelaide, 100 Franklin Street, Adelaide SA 5000

Overview

Does Australia need a new economy? The rising gap between rich and poor, and the deterioration of our climate system and biodiversity suggests we do.

Food. Housing. Energy. Water. Money. Work. Health. Media. What could they look like in 2030, what do we need to do to get there and what is already happening in Adelaide?

If you're ready to get involved in creating a new economy, this is a great opportunity to connect into existing initiatives, start one of your own, or find ways to collaborate with others.

Please join local and visiting new economy leaders at this thought-provoking evening of discussions. Speakers from different disciplines will share short summaries of what they think the economy should look like in 10 years' time, and what actions need to be taken now in order to achieve it. The discussion will then be opened up to participants, to raise an issue, share information about a new economy project they are working on, or to find out how they can become more involved in new economy initiatives.

Guest Speakers

- Dr Michelle Maloney, Co-founder and Director, New Economy Network Australia (NENA), and Director, Australian Earth Laws Alliance (AELA), Brisbane
- Sharon Ede, Audacities (relocalising production in cities), Share Adelaide, and Post Growth Institute
- Robert Crocker, University of South Australia - researches the intersection of sustainability, consumption and design
- David Riley, Chair, SA Makers
- Christy Spier, SA Urban Food Network

NENA 2030 Series

This event is part of a series by the New Economy Network Australia (NENA) and its partners in cities and towns around Australia, between June and September 2019. The discussions are aimed at stimulating conversation among members of civil society about what type of future we wish to build, and what changes need to happen now, to achieve that future.
